

"Variations"

I am an artist who appreciates being in the moment, allowing the tangle of thoughts and emotions that are prompted by what is taking place in the external environment and in my inner landscape to unwind and materialize on the canvas. The work always imparts and reflects some sense of landscape with suggestions of sky, solid land, water, and atmosphere. I accept what comes. I summon faith that a journey will ensue and the painting will “go somewhere,” and take the viewer to a place known or sometimes imagined. The process allows for a great deal of variation. This grouping is culled from different points in time over recent years, and because the process permits so much variation, I am calling this collection of different works “Variations.” They also speak to a certain kind of self-acceptance: paint, and it will come.

Laura Radwell